It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I’m deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I’m not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I’m from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man’s world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I’ll never know how much was raised but know that y’all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

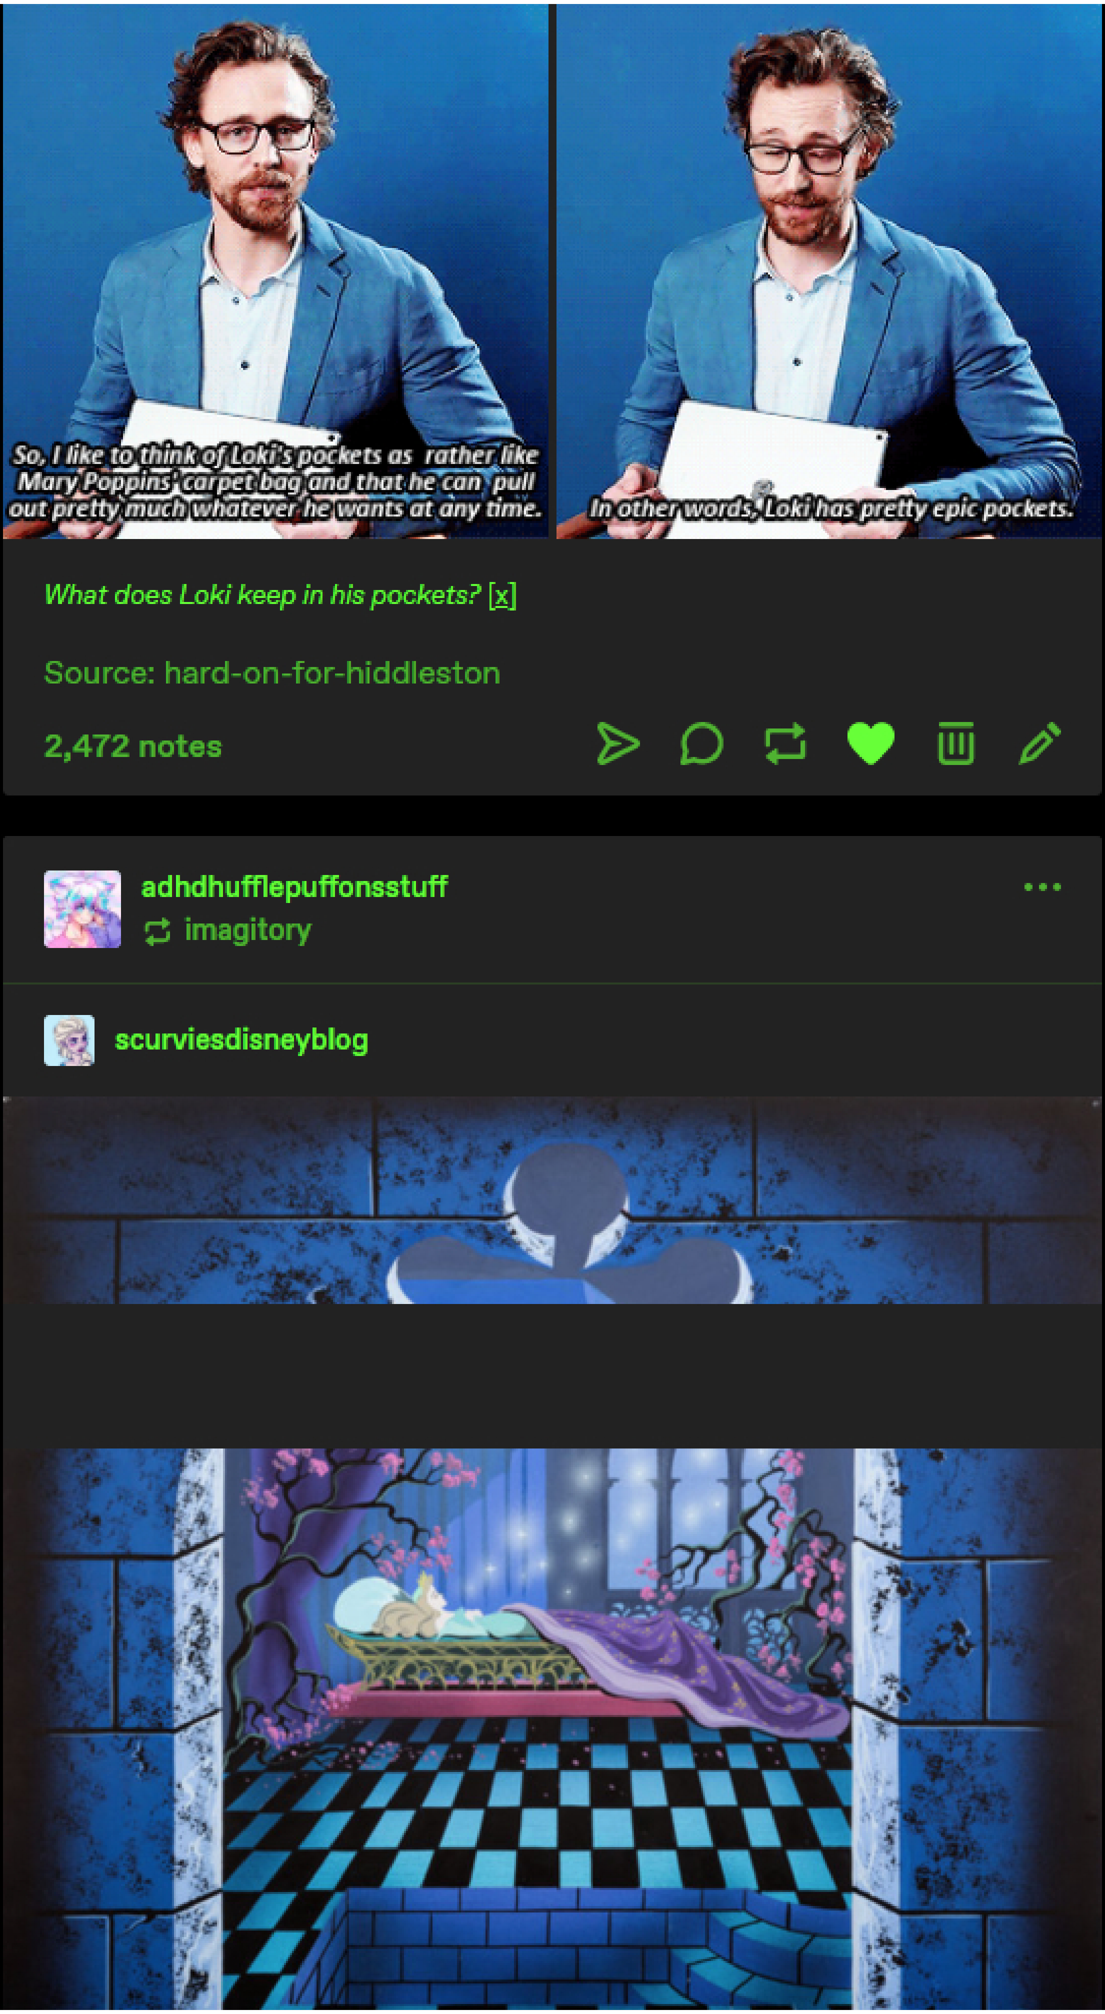
Technically, Loki doesn't have any pockets in my experience, it's intensely irritating. Where do you put your pencils? Where do you put your phone?

Where do you keep your snacks, in case you get a little hungry, you know, while traipsing through Asgard?

Somewhere he must have throwing knives. Potentially somewhere he must have the Tesseract - I mean, you've seen the trailor, right?

But, he's a magician and a soccerer so technically he has magic pockets.



So, I like to think of Loki's pockets as rather like Mary Poppins' carpet bag and that he can pull out pretty much whatever he wants at any time.

In other words, Loki has pretty epic pockets.

What does Loki keep in his pockets? [x]

15-hour work week

abcoconut Follow

Ok, but yeah. I want to work more than 15 hours a week. I genuinely love the challenge with what I do. 15 seems, oddly tiny? Where did this number come from?

@abcoconut then work more hours, you wouldn't be FORCED to work under 20 hours, the 15 hours is a guideline. No one should HAVE to work more to survive. Honestly no one should have to work at ALL just to make rent and food

This is a good response to that question, in case anyone wanted the q&a paired together. 15 would be the social average — some people might work more, some less, but that would be up to them. This is also presupposing a change in the way the economy effectively functions, in the sense that 15 hours would be the social average for necessary labor, and after that point you'd probably see tons of people participating in "unnecessary" labor out of interest. There's an idea in socialist theory that basically says once you reach a point far enough along after capitalism you'd just start seeing a blurring of the lines between what's defined as "work" (or as "a job") and what's defined as "a collective activity", especially with regard to the arts, science, etc.

At the very least, a transition towards (eco)socialism will require a vast shortening of the workweek and a reduction in overall advertising/consumption, whether that mean a 15-hour week or a 20-hour week. The main point is that people are overworked, we can meet everyone's needs feasibly with less hours anyway, and the over-emphasis on extraction and accumulation (which is in part fueled by a tediously long workweek) is having disastrous effects on the planet. We can both accomodate the needs of the planet AND expand the political horizons for the great majority of the population, but it will require the fundamental defeat of capitalism and the establishment of a new ecological workers' democracy. It's a big project, but so worth it in the long run.

What could a person possibly do for 15 hours a week that would warrant enough pay to live off of? 40 hours a week is completely reasonable and if you were like the rest of us you'd be fighting to get more hours. Not all of us have parents to fallback on cause we don't wanna put in a full weeks work

The 15-hour week presupposes a change in the economy first. Obviously capitalism requires long hours for people to survive, but in terms of pure stats it's not necessary for society to be working that much. There's enough resources for everyone, and so much work is pointless bullshit that only exists to line the pockets of the rich. The ecosocialist project demands a new way of looking at and distributing work. Get rid of the bullshit jobs, divvy up the necessary jobs, and we'd free up people's time immensely to engage in pursuits they actually want to do to contribute to society.

Also, food and housing and such would be guaranteed in an ecosocialist society anyway, so it goes beyond simply reorganizing work. People have a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and those will never be achieved for the great majority in a capitalist society.

If people are wondering where the numbers come from, think about all the redundant and pointless jobs that would be eliminated once capitalism is gone. The entire insurance industry would be gone. Large swathes of manufacturing making identical products with different labels, gone. Finance sector, gone. Wasteful R&amp;D on competing products instead of just everyone working to make the single best product they can, that's gone too. Planned obsolescence? Gone.

The more durable and functional you can make a product, the less you have to make it, the fewer hours we have to spend a week making the product, which would be passed down to the worker instead of up to the CEO. Instead of making sure that everyone has to buy a new washer and dryer every 10 years, you make one that people almost never have to replace. Same with cars. Same with electronics. You wouldn't have to gather as many materials, or as much time remaking product.

Under a communist/ecosocialist/ really any left-wing economic structure, any improvements in a product or service that reduces the amount you need to make, or reduces the time in which it takes to manufacture, is more time you get to spend not working. Do you wanna work 30 hours making these things? Cool! That means someone who wants to devote their entire time to developing entertainment for you when you get home doesn't have to interrupt that work anymore. Win/Win.

These were really good additions so I wanted t add them onto the cumulative post

asbr808 Follow

the whole point of capitalism is to maximize both the demand and the supply for a product, in many cases creating new avenues of consumption and production that didn't exist prior. Huge amounts of resources and time are used up to synthesize unnecessary activities and products. Simplicity is the sharpest knife.

captaindibbzy Follow

The reason you want more hours is because the hours you're working don't pay you enough to live off. Even in a less radical change in a closer future should mean more pay for less hours so you don't need to sleep in your car between 12 hour shifts at an Amazon warehouse because you don't have enough money to eat and afford rent.

raevenlywrites Follow

Can attest. Mentally, my happiest work weeks are the ones where I work a 5hr shift, 4 days a week. If I could sustain that without fear of its impact on my finances, I absolutely would. For my job, that's exactly enough time to do a fair share of the baking work, clean up after myself, and go home. That model fits the 8/8/8 more realistically, as I spent 2hrs before work getting ready (waking up, eating, travel, etc) and 1hr after traveling home and decompressing. 8hrs of my day dedicated to my job, which brings food to my community. On weeks like that, I feel most able to dedicate time to rest, leisure, my hobby job (writing), and my house and relationship. 20hrs a week, tops. Perfect

crypid-typal Follow

This 100%. As someone who is disabled and unlikely to be able to ever work a 40hr work week, this would be heaven. I have skills, skills that could be utilized to help make and maintain a functional society. But capitalism demands that I overextend myself to get new, less useful skills so the rich can make more money.

So many people would be HAPPY to do “”bad”” jobs if they weren’t treated like shit doing it and being forced to endure it.

Why does it matter if a sciencey image or video isn't real, if it's cool? (1) It causes people to be misinformed, which is the opposite of what most of us scientists on here want, and (2) it takes some of the shine off the real science and makes people more likely to dismiss it.

Katie Mack @AstroKatie · 1h

Also if you have a big platform and you tweet something and everyone who knows anything about it replies telling you you're wrong and you just leave it there and pretend not to notice, you make it clear you're happy to mislead your followers for retweets, and that really sucks.

Sure. Economics 101: Supply and Demand.

1. If supply is high, but demand is low, prices are low.
2. If supply is low, but demand is high, prices are high.
3. If supply is low, and demand is low, prices are low.
4. If supply is high, and demand is high, prices are high.

What we have in TX, is #4. The amount will likely get argued down to something more reasonable, but if people used the product during high demand, they will be paying for what they bought.

In May 1939, as the Nazis were tightening their chokehold on Europe, the United States government rejected the SS St. Louis, a German passenger vessel carrying 937 refugees who were trying to dock at the Port of Miami.

Almost all of those refugees were Jews fleeing violence in Germany and Eastern Europe, according to the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum. The ship was eventually forced to return to Europe, where 254 of its passengers were killed.

On Friday, to commemorate International Holocaust Remembrance Day, a pair of Jewish scholars — Russel Neiss and Charlie Schwartz — started tweeting the names of the people who were aboard the SS St. Louis, under the handle @Stl_Manifest. Read more

celestialmayhem Follow

I actually went to seminar of one of the passengers of the S.S, Louis who survived the holocaust a couple of months ago and something I learned from her was that the whole voyage of the S.S. Louie was a planned sabotage meant to act as Nazi propaganda and a fairly successful one. It's an incredibly important story so I wish to share it with my followers, especially with everything happening nowadays. Basically as best as i can remember it the story of the S.S, Louie goes like this:

During 1939 as Nazi's were rising in power and gaining control over Europe, Many German-Jewish families could see the warning signs and tried to find asylum outside of Europe for many the answer came in the form of the S,S, Louie a cruise ship taking refugees that was bound for Cuba. Most everyone who went on this journey had a legal Visa to enter Cuba, what they didn't know however was that the Nazi regime had been placing their agents closer and closer to the head of the Cuban government. They knew this ship was coming and wanted to make an example of them.

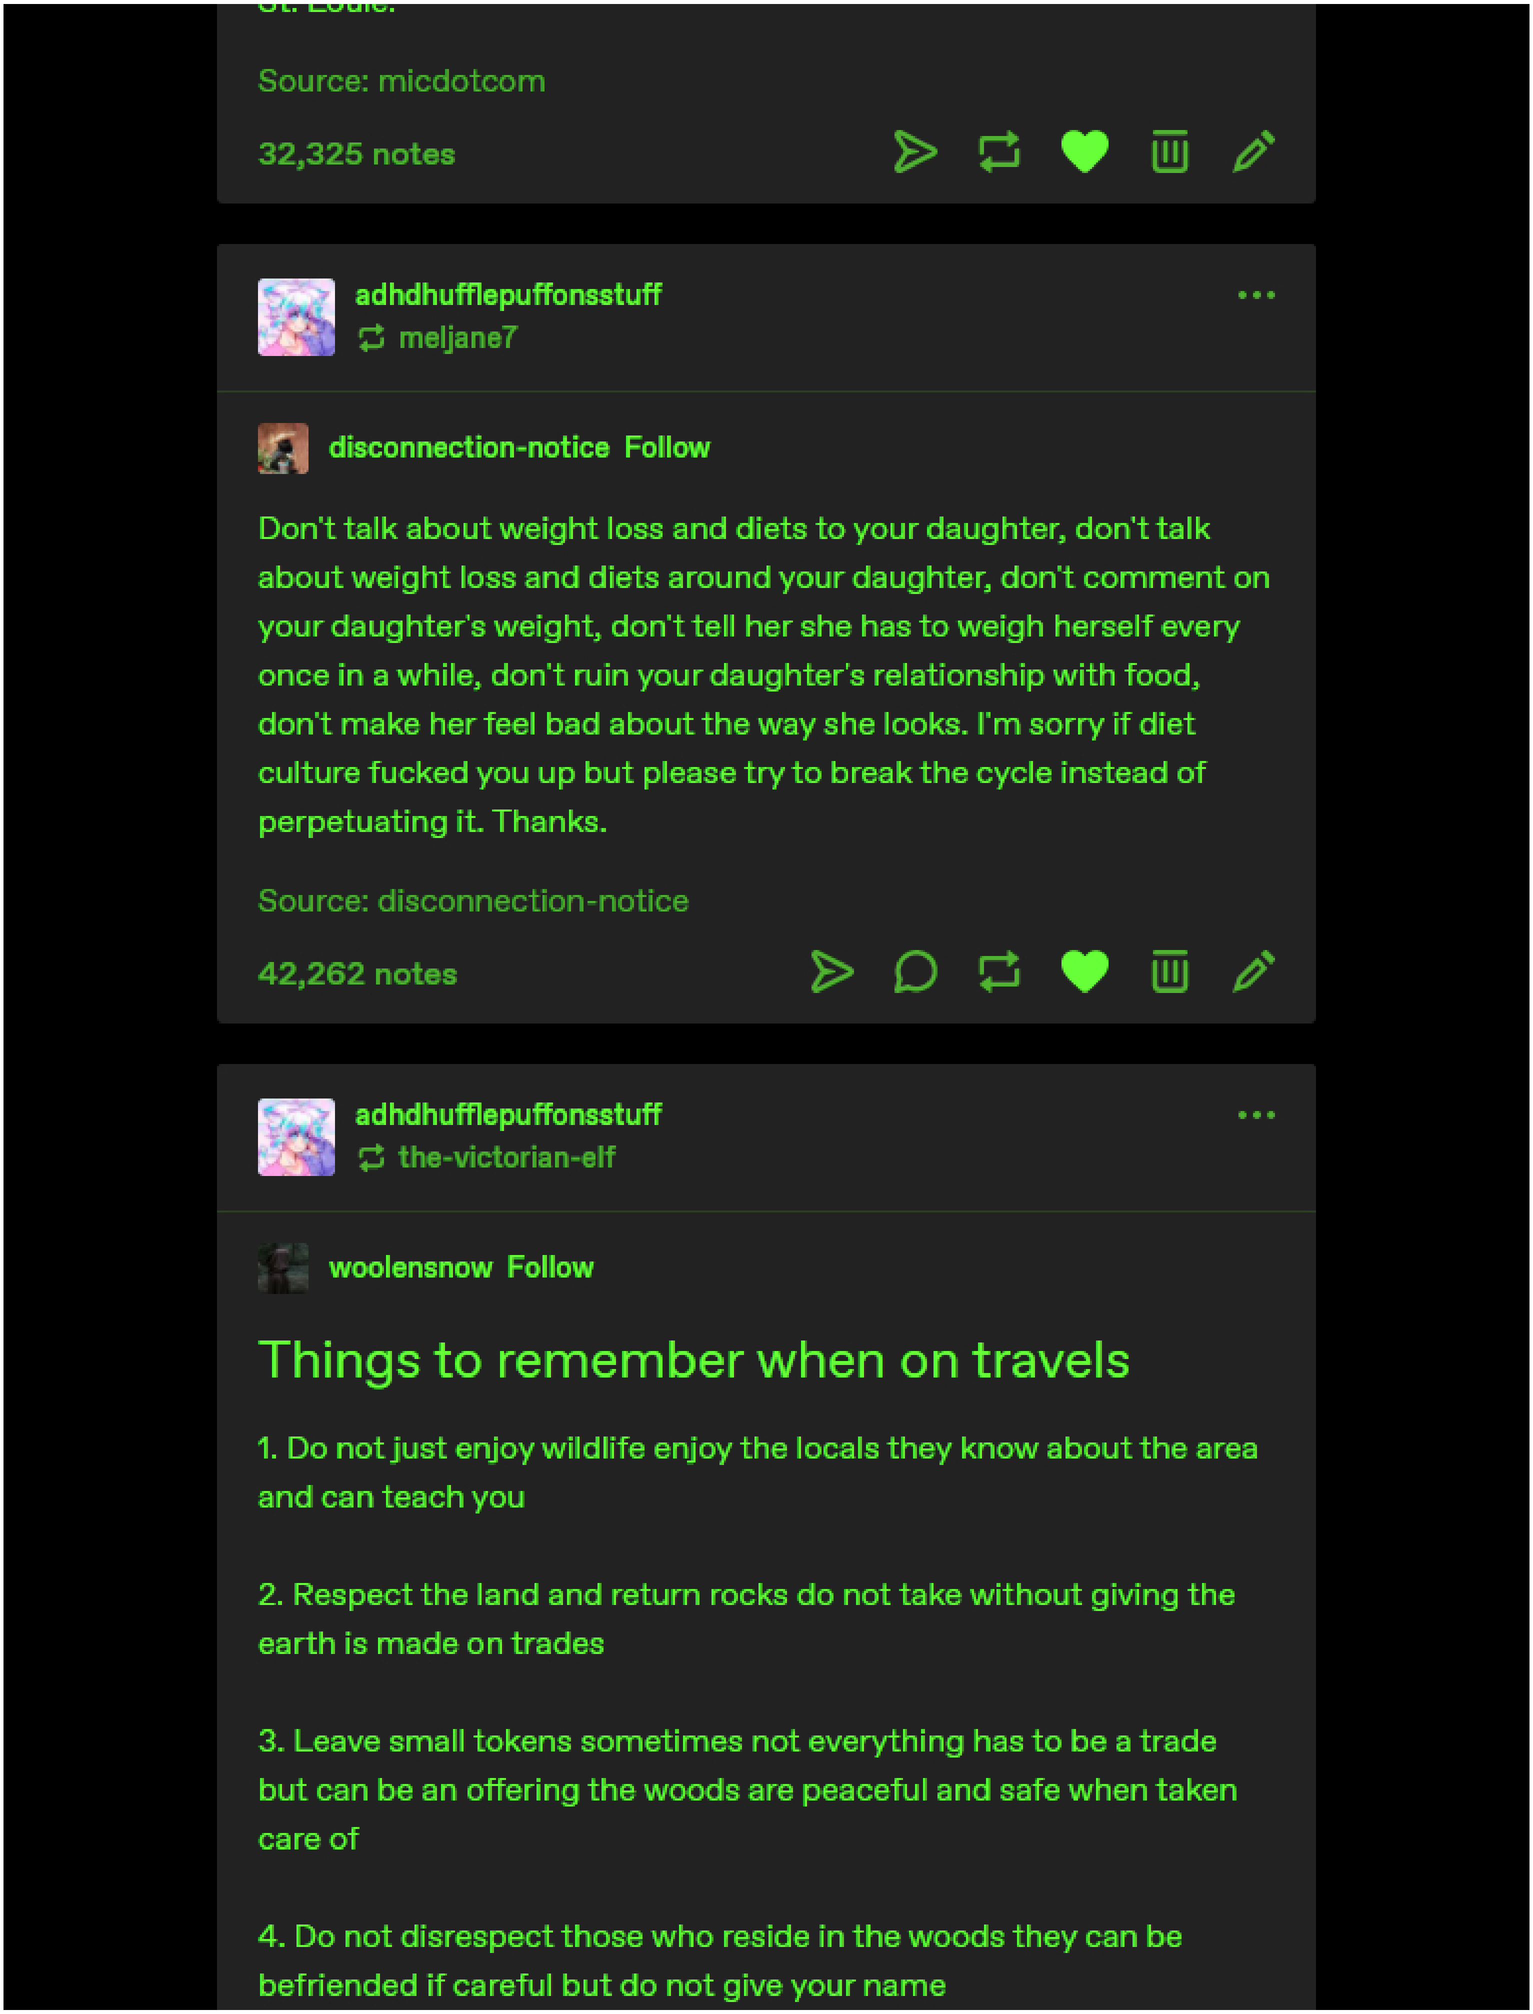
The nazi agents convinced the Cuban government to rescind the visas, so by the time they reached Cuba their Visas were no longer valid and the ship was not allowed to dock on the Cuban shore. The S.S. Louie remained docked for about ten days or so iirc before the captain realized there was no hope and Cuba was not going to take in the refugees as promised. Determined not to return to Germany with the refugees, The captain chose to sail to nearby Florida instead in order to seek asylum in America. However just like with Cuba The United states refused entry into the country, even after a Jewish Association in Paris offered to Pay the united states about $500 per person (again I might be off on the amount but regardless it was a lot of money at the time).

Meanwhile back in Germany, Nazi controlled Newspaper carefully documented the travels of the ship. The gist of most of the articles being: "Look, nobody wants these people, not the cubans not the states. We can't even pay them to take them. We are doing the world a favor by getting rid of these people" The Captain as well as the people in Paris tried desperately to get the US to take the refugees but unfortunately the US firmly denied them access. Realizing they were running out of supplies the captain had no choice but to turn back to Europe.

Still the Captain refused to return to Nazi occupied territory and instead sailed to England. Where they were able to convince Holland, Great Britain, Belgium and France to take their passangers. Unfortunately Holland and France would later be taken over by the Nazi's and thus many of these Refugees were murdered.

We as citizens can not allow this to happen again. Between, the Syrians, the lgbt russians and many many others we cannot allow more people to be turned away and sent back to their doom. It is the only way we can honor the memory of those passangers of the S.S. St. Louie



St. Louis.

I know y'all did not read the books but Roald Dahl talks about this in the book. Charlie's teacher points out the fact that unless you buy a shit ton of bars you're probably not gonna win. Just like the lottery. Just like how all of the other winners of the tickets bought a shit ton of bars. Except Charlie, who just got lucky. And Charlie was originally black. Literally the whole point of the book was that wonka wanted to give the less fortunate a fair opportunity and it wasn't fair because the system isn't fair.

Augustus Gloop and Veruca Salt, cheated the system by claiming a ridiculous amount of chocolate bars. News reports mention people hoarding Wonka chocolate bars in hopes of finding the Golden Ticket. Mr Salt even admits that he refitted his staff at a nut-shelling factory for opening chocolate bars, without a doubt losing a huge amount of capital in lost profits and mass bulk-buying of chocolate, just to win. The working-class lady who actually found that ticket didn't benefit from that luck or labour - she was immediately made to hand it over to her boss for his spoiled daughter, who holds it as 'his' victory and good luck.

Charlie didn't even find the ticket in his first bar, or his second. His first bar, his birthday present, was a dud, and he even failed to enjoy it like normal because he dared to hope, just for a moment, that he might actually be lucky enough to get the one. Later, he is lucky enough to find a dropped 50p piece in the street, and goes to buy a chocolate bar for himself. Finally holding a treat that is all his, he wolfs the thing down, stopping only long enough to realises that he didn't get lucky and win a Golden Ticket. It's only on the third bar that he gets it, and, smelling blood in the water, the shopkeeper tells him to immediately go home and not tell a soul that he has it, knowing what people might do to this small starving boy if they find out what he has.

And Wonka knows! He knows he done goofed! He realises almost immediately that the people who have been attracted to his lottery, who have stacked the decks in their favour, are awful, cruel, entitled people! Augustus Gloop, the glutton, doesn't care what placed in front of him so long as it's food - and the first obstacle? A room where everything is a kind of sweet. Violet's gum-chewing is excessive, but the modern film adapts this into a more realistic and sinister flaw - overcompetitiveness. It's not just that she's been chewing the same piece of gum for months, it's that she's been chewing the same piece of gum, weeks after its taste is gone, whether it is socially acceptable or not, just to break a record. So when Wonka promises a new treat, a personal favourite of one of the kids, but says it's not ready yet and you can't have it, of course Violet seizes it, because damn the consequences, she will be the first to try it. Veruca is shown a collection of unique animals, and immediately declares that she wants one, because she's always had the bragging rights and luxury rare items. And when Mr Wonka refuses to sell? She steals it, because dang it, she will have that golden goose/trained squirrel! Mike Teevee, in his hubris, mutilates himself almost beyond recognition because he had to challenge Mr Wonka's outlandish claim of transmitting physical objects via television. Charlie was the perfect heir, not because he was humble and poor, but because he had the wonder and appreciation for the treats Wonka made but also the sense and caution not to risk messing with the many dangerous things in an active factory. If the lottery was more fair, maybe Charlie would have had more stiff competition, but as it stands, Charlie is almost the poster boy of 'won by doing nothing'.

Sorry, got sidetracked

TLDR: Apart from Charlie, most of the other kids were entitled rich (white) kids who gamed a system that should have been fair, and were punished for it by revealing to them their greed and hubris

Pros and Cons of Bipedalism

Pros:

1. One of the most efficient gaits of the animal kingdom
2. Can carry and use tools while walking

3. Less area for sun exposure back in Africa (top of the head vs whole back)
4. Can carry our young since their stupid tiny hands can't cling to us anymore like proper primates
5. Taller: see predators coming, pick fruit from trees, give better high-fives
6. Look scarier to other animals

Cons:

1. Back hurty
2. BIRTH HURTY x100
3. Knees: "I didn't sign up for this."
4. Heart: "I didn't sign up for this."
5. our circulatory system has to work so hard bro
6. Big tiger can see us better
7. Did I mention how much birth hurts bc of our stupid upright hips? Seriously, commonly dying in childbirth isn't an evolutionary benefit smh

Anyway, I would like to hold a re-vote on walking upright, who's game?

biggest-gaudiest-patronuses actual real things about this fic:

- the Grinch is nonbinary & uses they/them pronouns
- the Grinch is autistic
- it takes place in the Jim Carrey movie universe, so the Grinch has two lesbian moms
- (side note, in the movie it was implied the grinch was conceived at a swinger's holiday party, but we don't have to talk about that)
- tony was a professional athlete who had a lucrative career appearing on cereal boxes
- tony the tiger is divorced w/ kids
- the Grinch is in therapy

Okay so I have grandparents that are like, Greek Christians which makes them very, very, conservative. Like every time I go over to their house with my parents I have to pretend I'm straight, (they know I'm a lesbian they just want me to pretend I'm not when I'm in their house) I can't wear anything above my knee because it makes me look like a "slut" and I have to be super polite and not talk about anything controversial or anything.

So I was at their house last week with my parents and they were having a go at my mum because she isn't talking to my aunt, and just being really horrible. Anyway they asked me what I was reading on my phone, and I don't remember what I was doing, but I said I was reading a fanfic, which is a novel written online by writers-in-training, and would you like me to read it to you? And they said, oh sure, dear, so I read them the whole first chapter of the grinch x tony fic, and when they I was finished I looked up at them both and they were just staring at me like I was crazy. It was the best.
and they said to my mum "what is god's name was are you letting your daughter read?!" And my mum said,

"oh, I don't know, but the more you tell her not to get mixed up with things the more she'll want to do it. Maybe you should calm down a bit."

So they just awkwardly offered us some lunch and I pretended like everything was fine, and we went back to their house yesterday and they were actually a lot more opened and understanding and it's all because of your freaking crack fic. Your freaking grinch x tony tiger fic has made my grandparents more accepting and open.

They say that every day the universe expands, and we discover certain things that we don't understand.
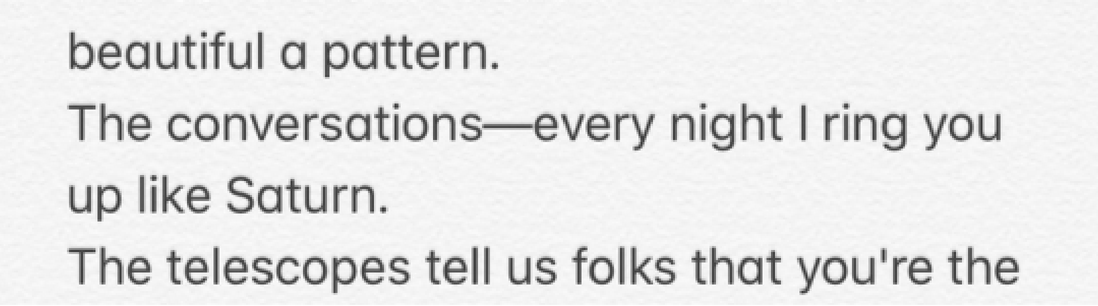
Dark matter ain't the only mystery at hand.
I'm wond’rin' how I got a girl like you to say that I'm her man.

It's a statistical anomaly, but girl you've got me.
Gravity is pulling me to your heavenly body.
No astronomical phenomenon could ever stop me.
You've got a smile that every star in the galaxy copied.



The constellations couldn't make as beautiful a pattern.
The conversations—every night I ring you up like Saturn.
The telescopes tell us folks that you're the coolest view.

A supernova's scooting over to make room for you.

'Cause you eclipse every wonder of the cosmos.
It's almost unfair to them, but you're the one I want most.
It's a miracle that Galileo never found you.
If he did, he'd say the universe revolves around you.

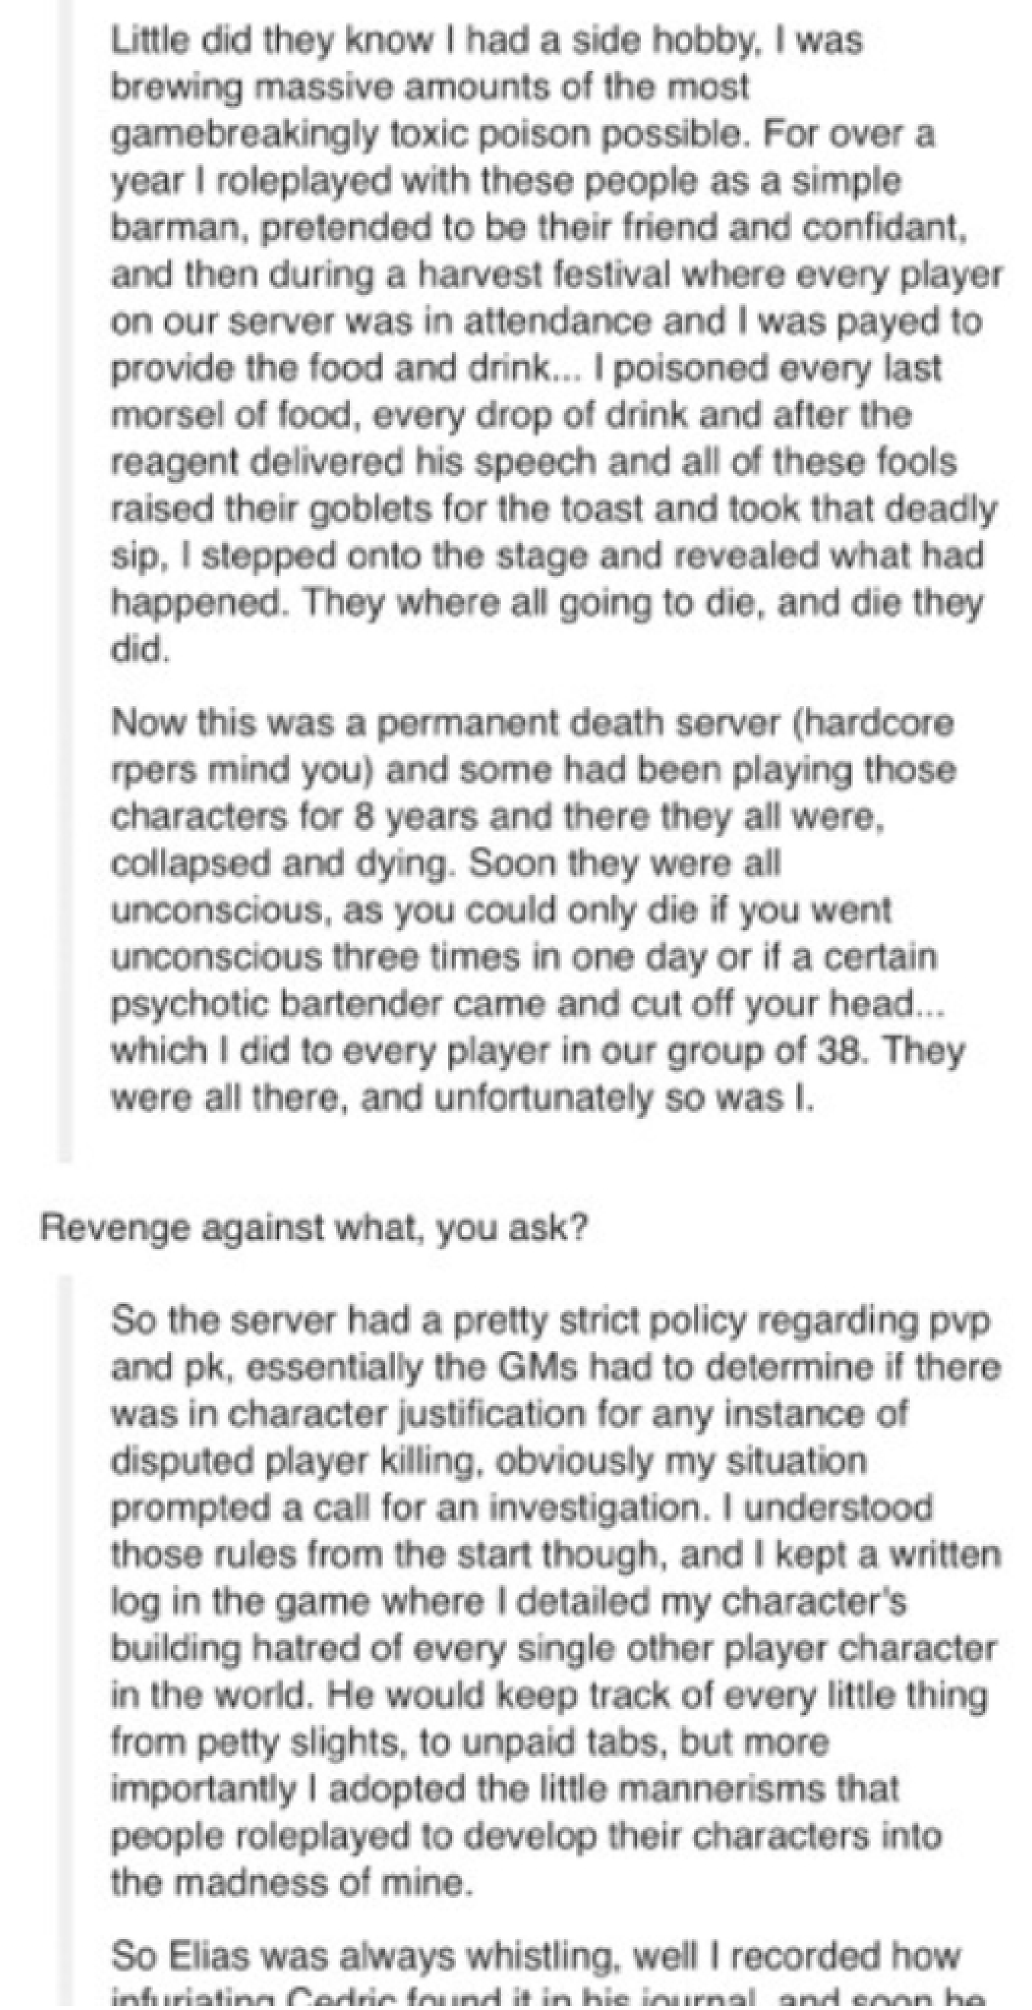
> God I spent countless hours as a teen playing on a heavily modded and roleplay enforced ultima online server. I played Cedric Sartone, simple farmer turned tavern owner who eventually turned it into THE BEST PLACE IN TOWN. It was poppin every night, I was buddies with every adventurer, soldier, mage, druid, and ranger that played the game. After they went out and grinded their skills and did their quests, I was waiting for them with a warm fire and plenty of ale. I'd buy their ingredients and make awesome food and booze (max level cooking!) and was privy to all the gossip.



> Little did they know I had a side hobby, I was brewing massive amounts of the most gamebreakingly toxic poison possible. For over a year I roleplayed with these people as a simple barman, pretended to be their friend and confidant, and then during a harvest festival where every player on our server was in attendance and I was payed to provide the food and drink... I poisoned every last morsel of food, every drop of drink and after the reagent delivered his speech and all of these fools raised their goblets for the toast and took that deadly sip, I stepped onto the stage and revealed what had happened. They where all going to die, and die they did.
> Now this was a permanent death server (hardcore rpers mind you) and some had been playing those characters for 8 years and there they all were, collapsed and dying. Soon they were all unconscious, as you could only die if you went unconscious three times in one day or if a certain psychotic bartender came and cut off your head... which I did to every player in our group of 38. They were all there, and unfortunately so was I.

Revenge against what, you ask?

> So the server had a pretty strict policy regarding pvp and pk, essentially the GMs had to determine if there was in character justification for any instance of disputed player killing, obviously my situation prompted a call for an investigation. I understood those rules from the start though, and I kept a written log in the game where I detailed my character's building hatred of every single other player character in the world. He would keep track of every little thing from petty slights, to unpaid tabs, but more importantly I adopted the little mannerisms that people roleplayed to develop their characters into the madness of mine.
> So Elias was always whistling, well I recorded how infuriating Cedric found it in his journal, and soon he had multiple journals packed full of a thousand reasons an unstable maniac could use to justifiably (re: server rules) murder anyone. The reagent who was also the server admin had some ornate cloak with a custom texture, so I wrote like three pages about how pompous it was, and extrapolated what kind of insufferable prick he must have been for wearing it.

I would just write one or two things down every day for over a year, so I had many books full for the GMs to locate in the tavern basement and read through. The result was that they found my massacre to be in good form and in-character, so the server was not rolled back and instead they decided to reset and implement a new landmass they had been working on. Some people were really pissed off, mostly a handful of the veteran players who had been top dog for several years in their little gladiator arena.

I only did any of it because my first character was murdered by some overzealous asshole who just used his character to project his inferiority complex. He killed me on my second day on the server because I wandered into the funeral of his friend (it was taking place in the middle of town and there was a crowd, of course I was curious) and because I was not invited and he was a known prick it was found justifiable for his character to kill mine because of the emotional turmoil blah blah. So yeah I said f*ck that, and rolled a new character who was ostensibly eager to please and non-threatening. I won.

This one? @team0player0

I think part of the reason merlin is so good is because of how intrinsically complex, compelling, endearing, and relatable Merlin himself is as a character. we get to see this naive country kid grow up over the years, and we witness his hardships, his victories, his 'uh oh this is definitely not right' moments, his struggle with moral amibiguity, his 'oh damn im a powerful warlock' realizations. we watch him build and forge relationships with anyone and everyone, and then we later see him experience what it is to lose almost everyone dear to him. and yes he changes, sometimes for the worse with how he becomes almost accustomed to violence and loss—but to me, Merlin never stopped caring till the end, he cared and gave his heart away till there was nothing left of him,, and that's just some of the reasons he is such a infallibly human character that it draws you in.

It's one of the things that makes it difficult for PoC, and Black people especially, to form real trust relationships with white people. Y'all don't know what's going on because no one tells you. And no one tells you because you can't actually handle the truth.

VERY interesting postulation. Back-inna'-day, if Classical Lit is any example, Western Europe was obsessed with exposition, innuendo, and double-entendre. Noone of a certain Class, EVER said what they REALLY meant. Especially when talking dirt about each other. In fact, it was considered skillful/clever if an individual could cloak biting/truthful commentary in the secondary or tertiary, intendedly benign possible interpretations, of Polite Conversation. In Polite Society, one might call another, 'Somewhat banal' or 'a brash contrarian', rather than calling them out as fucking idiots or blatant assholes. Now? With the American convention for Speaking Plainly, we have and utter rejection of Political Correctness.

HOWEVER, there are STILL... Taboo's... Things that One does not broach directly in mixed company.

One of those thing USED TO BE, blatant, unvarnished, racisim. Which, in past signaled/indicated the Uncouth, Hicks, Hayseeds, or Backwater Bumbkins. One DID NOT reveal their uncultured nature, bad taste, or lack of class, by being directly racist since racisim is and always has been, on-it's-face, contemptible. And so Innuendo, Coded Language, & Dog Whistles, were generally employed... For awhile.

Now, DEEP in the age of Non-PC Culture and with advent of cloddish Trumpian vulgarity, it's MUCH more acceptable to spew blatant racisim wherever/whenever. While, utterly hypocritically, NOT wanting to be called out AS Racist.

Considering all this? It might be fairly easy to understand how the convention of 'Real Talk', could be confusing/mystifying to American White Culture. Who often DOES NOT HAVE an interaction/Conversation Space where DIRECT SPEECH (Truth Tellin') is mutually agreed to be acceptable. I mean, notice how in Black Culture, 'Yo!… But, Real Talk?…' is often framed in preamble AND as a question. Giving anybody involved the opportunity to Opt-Out ('Naah Bruh! I ain't tryinna' hear all THAT!'). Bit in American White Culture, which is most often dominated by confrontational 'I say whatever, the fuck I want to, and FUCK anybody who's got a problem with that (Just DON'T call me Racist, please)!', attitudes? 'Real Talk?', just does not compute.

prismatic-bell

And for those of us in circles that aren't as….I'm going to call it "deliberately malicious racist" to differentiate here, because that differentiation is going to be important in a second.

People who aren't part of Trumpian hate circles, but still take part in unknowing or unconscious racism born of privilege, are often confused or even offended by the idea that they can be racist or take part in racist behavior because our association with the word "racist" IS Trumpian. It can be really tough to learn to separate those.

It's also true that we absolutely do still have that coded-impoliteness thing. Think about the last time somebody served you a meal that turned out to be godawful and went "I tried a new recipe!" Did you say "this tastes like dogshit" or did you go "mmm….it's really interesting! But I'm not that hungry, thank you" and then cringe when they said they'd save you some? How about "how are you?" "Oh, you know….living the dream" instead of "I'm so pissed at my boss I could scream"?

Shit, I struggle with job reviews because my boss is blunt as fuck. I'm trying to get used to the idea that I need to be okay with "real talk" and that it's not a personal attack, but man, it's fucking ROUGH. (And learning it is the only way to bridge that gap.)

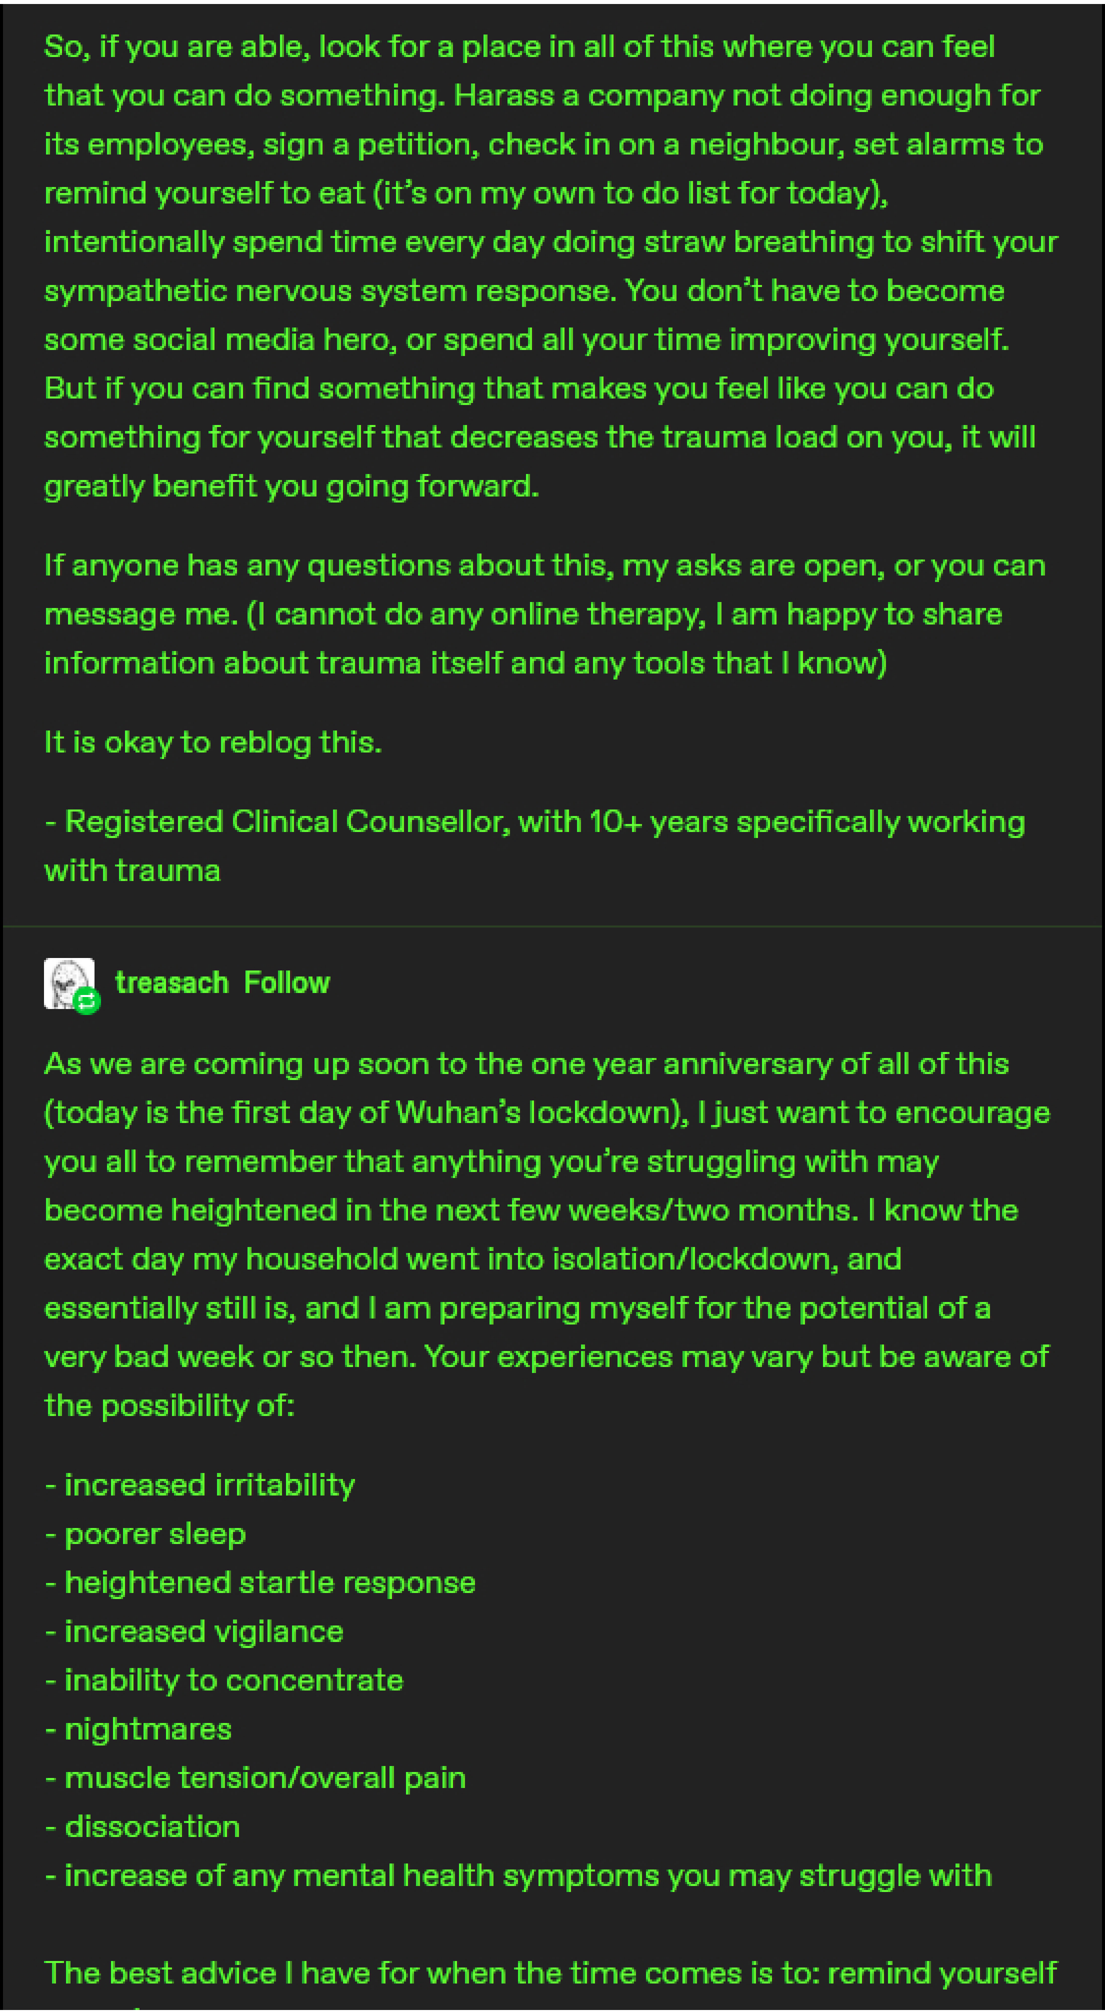
Hey, I just want everyone to know that what the world is going through is a legitimate trauma. Full on. It fits the "official" definition and everything. This is a traumatic event.

That means that it's normal and expected to find yourself using coping mechanisms that you thought you were done with, to find yourself numbed out, to be on the verge of constant panic attacks, to be acting impulsively and compulsively, to engage in very old patterns, to have wide swings of every behaviour especially regarding sleep, food, and sex.

The research shows that people in a traumatic situation who most often develop PTSD (which I would say we are all at risk of) or have their existing PTSD/C-PTSD intensified are folks who cannot or believe they cannot do anything about it the trauma event.



So, if you are able, look for a place in all of this where you can feel that you can do something. Harass a company not doing enough for its employees, sign a petition, check in on a neighbour, set alarms to remind yourself to eat (it’s on my own to do list for today), intentionally spend time every day doing straw breathing to shift your sympathetic nervous system response. You don’t have to become some social media hero, or spend all your time improving yourself. But if you can find something that makes you feel like you can do something for yourself that decreases the trauma load on you, it will greatly benefit you going forward.

If anyone has any questions about this, my asks are open, or you can message me. (I cannot do any online therapy, I am happy to share information about trauma itself and any tools that I know)

It is okay to reblog this.

As we are coming up soon to the one year anniversary of all of this (today is the first day of Wuhan’s lockdown), I just want to encourage you all to remember that anything you’re struggling with may become heightened in the next few weeks/two months. I know the exact day my household went into isolation/lockdown, and essentially still is, and I am preparing myself for the potential of a very bad week or so then. Your experiences may vary but be aware of the possibility of:

- increased irritability
- poorer sleep
- heightened startle response
- increased vigilance
- inability to concentrate
- nightmares
- muscle tension/overall pain
- dissociation
- increase of any mental health symptoms you may struggle with

The best advice I have for when the time comes is to: remind yourself that it's a normal response around anniversaries of difficult things; give yourself as much slack as you can around things that aren't necessities; give yourself as much soothing as possible (blankets, heat, gentle movies/music, whatever helps); keep yourself grounded in the present; remind yourself that it will pass because no feeling lasts forever.

I wanted to make this post so that if some of these responses do happen to you, you'll know why and thus decrease any panic/worry/spiral you may have about what is happening.

mckitterick Follow and if you need another excuse to accept this, we've had lots more trauma than "just" a deadly pandemic, too, like what's happening with the Texas power grid, what the USA has been going through since the January 6 insurrection, and what those living in Russia and Myanmar are contending with

instagram @harriyanna

people seem to downplay black history if it doesn't have to do much with politics, but it goes far beyond that. raven symone plays a big part into black history, at least for millennials and generation z.

instagram @harriyanna

raven symone was born on December 10, 1985. she is an actress, singer, songwriter, and producer.

she got her start on the cosby show, doing commercials, and moved on to other projects such as hanging with mr. cooper and zenon; before landing the lead roles she's best known for in the cheetah girls and that's so raven.

instagram @harriyanna

the cheetah girls and that's so raven are two pieces of media that play a strong and powerful role in black girlhood.

instagram @harriyanna

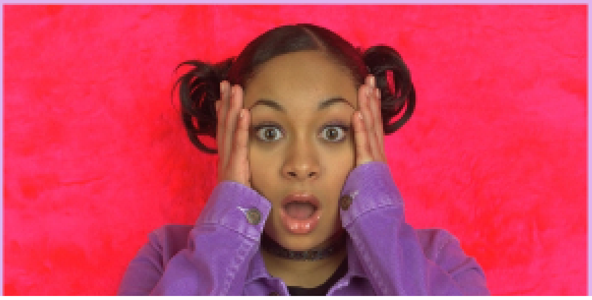
the cheetah girls and that's so raven two things that black people go back and reminisce on because of how much joy they brought them as a child; one of the major factors being that this was one of the first times they saw someone who looked like them on tv, portrayed in a good way.

instagram @harriyanna

raven baxter (that’s so raven) and galleria garibaldi (the cheetah girls) were very positive role models for black kids everywhere, at the time.

instagram @harriyanna

for children’s entertainment in the 2000s, most of the time black characters were side characters, suffered from tokenism, and were heavily stereotypical. with these two, they were actually well throughout and developed.



instagram @harriyanna

raven is continuing her legacy, reviving the role of raven baxter on the spin-off series, raven's home.

instagram @harriyanna

remember how we used to do black history projects in school? i decided to do one, this time so someone who is actually special to me.

TIL of a woman known as Patient S.M, who has no amygdala, which is the part of the brain responsible for fear. As a result she is unable to feel fear or read negative social cues, and doesn't understand personal space. The only time she ever felt fear is when a test was held replicating suffocation.

via reddit.com

armedandgayngerous

Science: wow this person has never felt fear

Science: let's fix that absolxguardian Follow

For everyone who says this is fucked up, SM volunteered to have the extent of her fear immunity (and other neurodivergence-like symptoms) studied. Of course scientists jumped on it. They started with horror movies (she enjoyed them, but didn't feel fear) and other scary things in a controlled environment. They also tested her ability to feel other emotions and relate to other scenes from films. The suffocation simulation involved the direction injection of CO2 into her bloodstream. There was also a control group of nuerotypical people. The interesting part is that she was more freaked out than they were, likely because the control group could temper their fear with the knowledge that they weren't in any real danger. But she is unable to process context clues in regards to fear.

This was in 1994, so an ethics board was involved and this provided us very useful insight into the neurological nature of fear and the purpose of the amygdala. Also she's almost been murdered on multiple occasions. This is one of the least dangerous things that's happened to her.

ottermatopoeia Follow

i think the most interesting thing about this is that it implies the fear of suffocation is not something that is processed or propagated by the amygdala, which is a rather new part of the brain compared to the brainstem. fear of suffocation is a far deeper, older, and more instinctual fear, something so deep that even creatures without a limbic system might experience it.

idk how to describe this properly but there is Something There with characters who show their love through devotion, through service… loving from a distance, and proving their love by looking after them, caring for them, keeping them safe… i'm thinking about "i can't carry it, but i can carry you" from sam gamgee, i'm thinking about "til my dying day" from eliot spencer, i'm thinking about "not to me, not if it's you" from pylades, "i'm with you to the end of the line" from bucky barnes… love through the act of Following, of swearing fealty. and the tender surprise that comes with it when their loved one adores them in return.

I wish people understood that nb people gendering themselves and playing around with gendered terms and letting their friends gender them is like.... Different than a stranger gendering you. Because with a stranger, I have no idea how you're navigating my gender, other than that you're calling me by limiting terms and judging me based on those limited terms. Whereas with myself and my friends like..... I know them calling me a queen or king or boy or bitch or whatever... They Get It and they Know what I am so they aren't limiting me, they're playing in the space that is gender. So, I guess bottom line is: if you're a stranger, stop assuming you can gender and label people who you don't know.

To be fair, Selina Kyle and Pamela Isley were straight up murdered. For all we know, Selina is a Revenant and Pamela is in a resurrective mind altered state that results in homicidal tendencies. Maybe Barbra Minerva is also in an altered state of mind due to the plot thing, and Edward Nigma had his brain turned to gush through self experimentation, so I don't think it's entirely a case for "I'm a clumsy nerd who gets bullied by people for being Weird so now I'm going to be evil, now."

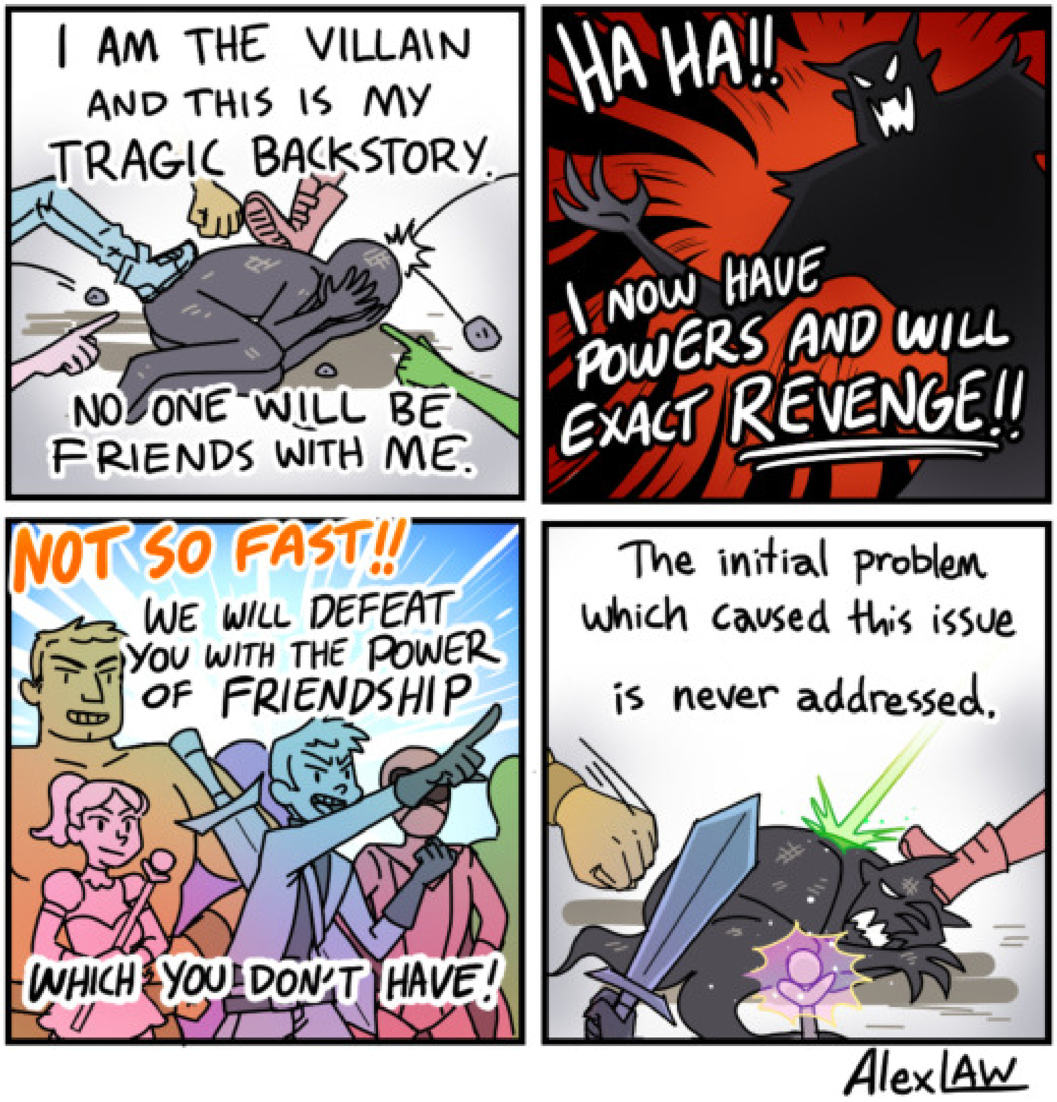
captain-acab Follow

You're missing the point. Especially as a self-professed writing blog, you should recognize that tropes stem from the conscious decision-making of real-life writers, not the fiction characters they choose to write.

In each of the screenshots, the writers made the decision to write each villain as a weird-hair big-glasses nerd that nobody likes, then turn them into a villain, and that is the behavior we need to examine.

Is it a fantasy? Do the writers imagine themselves as the nerds (which, knowing several film writers, they probably did feel like at multiple points in their lives), and this is them fantasizing about getting revenge on people who bullied them?

Or is it apologism? Are they showing us the people they find weird or unlikable and showing that, aha! These people were only a step away from being evil anyway, so bullying them was justified!



I AM THE VILLAIN AND THIS IS MY TRAGIC BACKSTORY.
NO ONE WILL BE FRIENDS WITH ME.

AND THEN THEY LIVED HAPPILY EVER AFTER THE END!!!!

atenderofsycamoretrees Follow ok every time this post comes by i resist geeking out on it but NO LONGER so these women are probably the same woman and that woman is monet's wife camille doncieux. he painted her a LOT.

but fun fact: monet had this asshole friend named ernest hochede, and ernest racked up some debts, and like an asshole he basically just fled the country, leaving his wife alice and their six kiddos behind. monet immediately got alice and kids to move in with him, camille, and their two kids.
at this point, monet, alice, and camille became my favorite probably historic poly threesome. they lived together, taking care of the kids. they were so poor that alice and camille took turns wearing the nice dress so they could go out with monet.
when camille got uterine cancer and began dying, alice helped monet cope and took care of things while he painted camille over and over.
when camille died, alice is the reason monet was able to survive.
when ernest finally died, monet and alice married, and remained married until alice died. at that point, blanche, the oldest daughter, took care of monet until he died.
anyway, the point is, the umbrella ladies are probably the same ladies, but as far as i'm concerned, there WAS a historically queer poly family in that household and they were wonderful.

So there's this huge dudebro in my class, who, yesterday, sat next to me. And I'm sitting there sweating because like... I'm wearing my shirt with the lesbian flag on it, and he's the most popular jock in school, and always has this look on his face that say 'I can and will kill you'. He looks me up and down, stares at me for a minute and then goes, "So. Girls in skirts and long socks, am I right?"

To which I nodded solemnly, both out of agreement, surprise and also a healthy amount of awkward fear. He nodded and went, "You get it."

I said, "Yep." He fistbumped me, and on went our lives.

good-ho-mens Follow

Oh! I forgot to mention! I saw him at lunch the same day, and he ran up to me, tapped me on the shoulder, pointed at this super sweet girl who comes to GSA and asked if she's gay. I told him he should ask her because that's not my place and he said he would.

I thought that would be the end of it.

Except ten minutes later he came back and told me he found out (she's bi) and that both of us have a shot. I said "You more than me." because he's attractive and popular.

But this wholesome dumbass looked really confused and asked, "Because I'm tall?'

good-ho-mens Follow

So this isn't lesbian/jock solidarity but I thought you guys would want to know-

Update- after school today he saw me in the library and he didn't say anything? He just pointed at the book he was holding and I gave him a thumbs up because it's a pretty good book, and he went "Yes!" Really quiet and pumped his fist and then left

good-ho-mens Follow

Okay so today he asked me if I know how to help people having a panic attack and I was like yeah? And he smiled at me and then went "cool I think I'm having one"

And I was like what the fuck Colin we're in the middle of Tech class sit down and we went out in the hall and sat there for a while and he told me about the test he's stressed about so we kind of went over his study guide and when he was feeling better he kind of like... smacked his head against mine gently? And I helped him up even though he's almost a foot taller than me and yeah

Today at lunch we walked to the football field and laid in the grass and I told him thank you for being my friend (because I don't have that many) and fistbumped me and said, "You always looked so nice and chill, how could I not want to be your friend?"

And honestly y'all, I would've started crying if he hadn't sneezed and accidentally smacked me
